Will The Penalty Be Immediate? Three attempts were made to break the Official Credibility Scoreboard (OCSB) of the English Premier League (PL) at Stamford Bridge this afternoon. Firstly, Raheem Sterling intentionally struck the ball into the stands after he was shown a straight red card. Then Mohamed Salah grabbed the ball off the top of the advertising boards and threw it in the air. Finally, substitute Moustapha Salah attempted to do the same. He seemed to throw the ball in but it ended up in the stands. Will he face an immediate seven game ban for the incident, as an FA charge sheet would suggest? In question 10 of the code of conduct, we can read: "10. The Referee shall uphold the law and any relevant competition or disciplinary rules" Interestingly, if you search for this question on the FA's website, the only answer that comes back with a score of "3" is "No". It reads: "Having received the material needed to resolve the incident, and given due regard to the relevant rulebook, he considers that the individual should be cautioned by the Referee and such caution should be given if the incident is not otherwise dealt with under Law 10" Law 10 can be found here: Now, by the very definition of Law 10, this means that, should the incident be dealt with under Law 10, then there is no further action taken. However, if the incident is not dealt with, the ref will issue a caution to the player. And here's where it gets interesting. This rule allows the ref to
