The GIMP (GNU Image Manipulation Program) was first developed in 1997 as a free alternative to Adobe Photoshop. It was developed as a fork of the Photoshop coding, and it is currently maintained by a community of volunteers. The GIMP uses a "pixel-based" editing system, in which every pixel is treated as a separate, individual color. The program consists of tools for basic photo editing, color correction, resizing, layout, and image composition. The GIMP is particularly useful for professionals and advanced amateur photographers and has a wide range of uses, including correcting and manipulating scanned images, working with color images, and others. One of the best things about the GIMP is that it is free. However, the software requires certain levels of knowledge. Therefore, it's not a good starting program for beginners. ## JPEG Joint Photographic Experts Group (JPEG) is a group of scientists and engineers who create and develop the JPEG file format, as well as a set of other image formats. The JPEG file format has been the de facto standard for still images on the web for many years. JPEG is designed to compress images with a high level of quality without significantly degrading the image's visual quality. JPEG files are binary files that store a compressed version of an image. The JPEG compression process is based on the quantization method. ## LZW LZW (Lempel-Ziv-Welch) is a method of compression that was developed by two Israeli scientists for use in handling large files in the early 1990s. LZW uses a method to store the visual information in a bit map, which is a form of binary data that uses a fixed pattern. The data is coded in blocks or _codewords_ (or _symbols_). For this purpose, all that matters is to convert the black and white image into a binary code that is simple to interpret. The technique requires a quantization table (QT) and a lossless coding table (LCT). ## PNG The Portable Network Graphics format (PNG) is a file format developed by the same group that created the Joint Photographic Experts Group (JPEG). The use of the same name for

Show HN: A Python Package for Storing Generated Models for Deep Learning - andyr ===== andyr This is a wrapper around `maven` in python. It was inspired by osquery's memory-junkie library, which I created a while ago for storing experiments. Currently, it allows users to store models, configurations, and logs as a quick write + offline read for later analysis. For now, it's currently not feature complete, but I'd love to hear your feedback! What do you think of the idea? What should be next? Is there any useful feedback you can give? Surface-enhanced Raman scattering from benzonitrile adsorbed on silver metal nanostructures. We report the fabrication of silver metal nanostructures (AgNWs) of differing length by a facile nanowire elongation method. The long nanowires appear to be grown along the [111] direction. The elongated silver nanowires were used as substrates for the fabrication of AgNWs/mica composite with modified AgNWs and further, application of AgNWs composite in SERS as a surface-enhanced Raman scattering (SERS) substrate is discussed. Our results suggest that the p-polarized Raman signals from benzonitrile (BEN) molecules can be dramatically increased on the modified AgNWs/mica composite, compared with the pure AgNWs/mica composite. The enhancement factor of the modified AgNWs/mica composite was found to be decreased in the following order: AgNWs
