===== This is a story-driven adventure game with strong visuals and a minimalistic story. During your everyday life you might notice your mind flickering between lucid and non-lucid dreams. You might see things differently or hear sounds in ways that can't be explained. The ever-changing world of your dreams suggests they are affected by something outside this reality, something that reveals the path to an incredible journey of awakening and survival. Will you be able to break the shackles of your reality and follow the clues of the unknown? Your actions are followed by a simple, non-cliché story which will lead to an epic cinematic ending. Extra Details:

===== ▶ David's 'Dreams': a book containing lucid dreams that can be read by Daniel and can help him break free from the shackles of reality. ▶ A personal narrative: the events of this game, and of Daniel's childhood, are real, and a great part of the story. ▶ An immersive experience: wake up, take a shower, put your pyjamas on and your shoes, then it's time to go in search of answers in this new world. ▶ Your views: the game is designed to be playable in a theatre, as an experience lasting about one hour. ▶ Top Tens: (as rated by the press) ▶ Eurogamer - "A quite special little experience" ▶ Raywire, "a game of depth and subtlety" ▶ Posiblemente, "A surreal experience that has a sense of humor" ▶ Resident Evil Gameplay (article translated from Spanish) ▶ This game is remastered with 20% of the graphics made from scratch

Observe the environment, collect the items and use them to get through the enemies. Collect enough money to buy better items and speed up the game. There are four different modes. Story Mode: This is the main story mode. In this mode the player gets guided through several different levels where you have to avoid the monsters in your way. You will have to navigate through the world and listen to the noise around to find out the path forward. Collect the right items and use them to speed up the game and get through the level. : A DM-Centric Blog by Ollie Tromp Top Cottage Marine There's something immensely nostalgic about visiting a cottage far, far away from all civilisation. No matter how much I enjoyed Vanuatu, there was one thing about it that I didn't enjoy: the difficult boat transfers. You might be wondering what I'm talking about if you've never ever seen Vanuatu, but the journeys from the airport to the various islands are, perhaps to put it mildly, less than pleasant. Upon arrival at the harbour, the bus will make its run past a grumpy immigration officer who'll insist that you remove all your shoes before you enter the building. The bus will then drop you off at a dirt parking lot - the only car park in Vanuatu - and you'll be on your own to decide how, or not, you're going to get to where you need to go. As an added point of annoyance, it's very difficult to find maps of the islands, and I got myself completely turned around on my first night of the trip due to the fact that one had been lost. As a result, I walked ten kilometres up the road to the next village, just to be able to find a hotel. I then spent what felt like ten hours in the middle of nowhere trying not to get lost in the bush and met quite a few locals on the way there. I felt very much like I was in an unforgiving JRPG or a Blade Runner movie. It must have worked though, because I was met in the little town by a taxi driver who whisked me to the only hotel where I was staying in the entire country. After a suitably epic night of being caught in the rain by a drunken stranger who managed to stick a cigarette out of my backside despite me saying no, I found the first of several local youths who would come and visit my backpack to sell me groceries for dollars or, in this case, cash vouchers that I could later spend at the 'real' shops. To be fair, my backpack looked very dodgy, and it was well past its expiration date, so I paid them very generously. I checked into my cottage for the next week, dropped the backpack in a heap by the side of the road and prepared to slowly drift off to sleep. It was at that point that I began reflecting upon

The blackness expands through the forest, where he sees a silent world under the moon's light. A forest, and in this forest a village living in a village. He hears rustling in the shadows, and suddenly with an extreme start he presses the gun to his heart and his hand. A bear is pressing him against a tree. He sees the saliva rolling to the ground and the smell of a bear that has not drawn breath in a long time. He is scared.

"Why so alone, why not hang out?" But the bear also doesn't talk, only repeating: "Nyjezdor - you are scared and want to be strong".

"Why didn't you do what?" Said Still Dark; "Take away the fear and fight for your village." The bear embraces him, cuddling him until a big warm, all-because the bear had been lonely for a long time. Then they can speak a little about things.

One must first kill the fear of the wilderness.

"You thought you had a chance with that little town in the distance, huh?" Still Dark laughs under the auspices. "Hahaha ... well you got scared ... so both the village and the bear got scared."

"Where are you heading?"

"Let's go there!"

"You shall kill the fear of the wilderness
