Financial recovery could take 10 years: NAB NAB has said it expects a more measured recovery in the financial services sector, which has been significantly affected by the Global Financial Crisis. NAB chairman of the board Stephen Hester told the City from the company's Annual General Meeting in Sydney the global economic recovery is expected to take a decade or more. "A very important change in the economic backdrop is that we have experienced an easing in the pace of the growth in our major markets and a steadying of bank lending," Hester said. "The loss of growth in our major markets, combined with some difficult trading conditions for non-bank credit providers, have meant that the growth rate of our business has been lower than we expected prior to the Global Financial Crisis. "Our view is that the level of activity in our major markets will stabilise and move up slowly over time, with the result that our business will once again show growth of at least 5-6%." Hester added that NAB's capital levels have stabilised, and that the low interest rate environment has allowed NAB to fund the new interest-only loans and the purchase of the market-leading First Choice business for $87.5 million. the L.F.E. charge is a true filing.
