The field of the present invention is thermosetting compositions which are curable with a latent amine or other curing agent or more preferably rapidly curable with a latent curing agent. Latent curing agents for thermosetting compositions can be a variety of amines, certain triazines and aldehydes. While latent curing agents have the advantage of requiring less handling, mixing and storage space, latent curing agents are often not easy to incorporate into the thermosetting compositions. Trifunctional benzyl ethers can be used to form high molecular weight polymers but these compounds contain volatile carboxylic acid groups that must be neutralized with alkali metal hydroxides or bases to form the desired latent curing agents. It has now been found that a trifunctional benzyl ether which has been capped by reaction with a polyalkene or polyalkadienyl silane does not contain carboxylic acid groups and can thus be used to prepare a latent curing agent for thermosetting compositions.
